February 18, 2016

Trail #91

Where: Scratch, 1720 Lowrie St, Pittsburgh, PA 15212

When: Thursday, February 18, 2016 at 6:30pm

Who: The Blondetourage (Lips of Steel, Shitty Titty, & Pounded in the Can)

Why: Because blondes do it better!!!!

This trail is A to A.

Trail difficulty from 1-5, with 5 being the hardest:

Shiggy: 4

Poison Ivy: 0

Hills: 5

Sexiness of the hares: 10+

Portions of the trail are not dog friendly. Since the bar is not dog friendly either, we ask that the pups be left at home. Vibram shoes or any other shoe with thin soles are not recommended. A head lamp is necessary!

Cupid was not good to the Blondetourage - Lips didn't have anyone to kiss, Shitty Titty didn't have a gang bang, and Pounded in the Can did not get pounded. Join the three of us as we traverse the streets looking for love in all the right, but more likely wrong, places.

This trail will resemble bad relationships. Everything starts out nice and lovey dovey with flowers and chocolates in the evening followed by hot sex and mimosas in the morning. Until one day, when you find yourself walking on glass and dodging bullets.

We only ask that when it's all over, can we still be friends?

The owner of Scratch is very excited to have us. The kitchen closes at 10pm however, he is willing to feed us later than that if food orders are placed prior to chalk talk.

Trail #91 Review by Major Pecker

When I came to trail Thursday night, little did I know that the ride up Rialto Street to get to Scratch would be just a taste of what we could expect on trail. Blissfully unaware, everyone enjoyed some delicious beers and some of us played some board games that were laying around the bar. Soon enough, we were blessing our Blondetourage (v2.0) of hares with their glittery flower, and trying to interpret their hermaphroditic marks for trail.

The hares teased us at first, with some flat streets and even some downhill. Then, about a half a mile into trail, everything started going downhill (or should I say uphill?). The hares took us up some huge hills, only to be followed by staircases leading us further up. Fortunately, they broke up the monotony of an uphill climb with our first shot stop on one of the many sets of stairs in Troy Hill. We had delicious mimosas and a bottle of Riesling, not to mention Hershey’s Kisses and a chocolate rose. So romantic. From there it was a short trip up to St. John’s Cemetery, where we climbed a fence and had a beer stop (with a nice view of the city).

There was a bit of confusion leaving the cemetery, as the pack split into about 20 directions. Fortunately, we found our way out eventually. We were rewarded for our long climb with a nice downhill run along the road until the road ran out, and then it was back into the shiggy. Here we stumbled across an abandoned hobo fortress, and Scrum Guzzler was the first to take a seat on the hobo throne. The hares kindly included another shot stop here to give us a chance to enjoy the hobo hospitality – poop buckets and all. Bolstered by the shot, it was time for some more hill climbing up and down until we reached the spray park at Cowley-Goettman Park, where we found beer next to the terminally giggly hares. Sadly, the water was off, but we still had fun climbing around on the spray equipment.

From there it was a short jaunt to the circle location behind the outfield of a local baseball diamond. Potty Guard once again did us the honor of running circle, Gay Horse Dancer was awarded her tags, Lips of Steel was given her cup, and we all got good and drunk. Shit trail.
