White Elephant Christmas Trail

Holidays got ya down? Tired of braving the hordes of last minute shoppers at the mall? Are you exhausted of scouring the racks at Toys R Us for that last elusive Hatchimal? Then come to the annual PITT H3 White Elephant Christmas Trail.

Give your wrapped gift to Major Pecker at Sign-in along with your $5. Santa's magical sack of goodies will somehow make its way to circle, where we will celebrate the season of giving.

Remember it truly is better to give than to receive!

Trail Review: By Tastes like Sushi (The Harriette formerly known as Sky)

It was my first trail back in town since 3 months, although knowing hashing in pgh is usually a greater adventure with shiggy trails and fun eccentric people, the white elephant Christmas trail still managed to surprise me.

We gathered at yesterday’s bar and grill which is owned by one of the hasher Jenna (Ed. Note: Legitimate Grape), the moment I entered the bar I was thrilled by the cheering holiday decoration and of course the piled up gifts on the table. It was a huge turn up, I guess people are bored staying at home drinking eggnog for holiday season. We hit the road after a few chitchats. The trail started on the flat part of the streets, and then we encountered some classic escalating hills which is killing our knees but still more interesting than running on the flat concrete city roads.

As we continue running/gasping heavily/dying on the quiet greenfield avenue, passing by numerous houses decorated by inflatable animals, twinkling star projections, funkily cut trees. About one and a half miles run, we arrived at the first beer check which is behind a car wash, with a whole view of the great steel city. Looking down from hills, the city looked really lit (Ed. Note: #lit). We passed by a playground and we had to crawl into a tiny opening of the wire fence to get on the true trail. And we ran into the woods with annoying twig and slippery mud ground, we had our second beer check there. The beer check was neat with a view overlooking Hazelwood and the new Uber test site.

Off we went to the squirrel hill, after unsuccessfully attempt to ran the shortcut, a bunch of us got lost, so we were running back and forth to find the last chalk mark, finally after a loop, we heard someone yelling “on-on”, so we found the pack, yay! The circle was on the lump of the woods beside the road, we named the hare: Just Margot there and exchanged gifts, the hashers who were called on to the accusations, got to pick the gift first. Such a good idea to have gifts exchanged in circle, cause at the end of the trail, we were all frozen to death and need the motivation to stick around. Some hashers got teddy bear and some got dildo shaped squirt gun. Those who were not content about their gifts exchanged/stealed from other hashers. The final bar was just a few steps away from the circle, we stayed there mingled and drank more.

It’s always good to be home, thanks you guys for hosting such a memorable trail!

ICP’s BBQ tips and tricks

This actually doesn’t have anything to do with BBQ but I should have your attention now, if not keep reading anyway. We still need names for the trail lottery, what is the trail lottery you say? Only the super coolest idea ever! The idea is simple, if you want to participate in the lottery simply message Major or myself or tell us at an upcoming trail and we will put your name down. Now what does that mean for you? Well we will be drawing names out of a hat at some point in the near, near future to pair hares together to lay a trail. We will not be picking the date for said trail or planning anything other than getting forks together randomly to lay a trail. The idea is to get to people who haven’t laid a trail together and have a good time, or a terrible time whatever, that’s up to you! The idea is to pair 2-3 peeps together depending on how many forks we got, if all new boots get paired together we may pick another name out and try to get them with someone with more experience. Tip for BBQ, use fire!
